At the beginning of the 19th century, most people in Europe did not believe that animal species died out. By the end of the century, however, people understood that the Earth had once been full of dinosaurs and other strange animals. An important reason for this change was the discovery of many dinosaur fossils. One person who played a big part in these discoveries was Mary Anning.

Mary was born in 1799 in Lyme Regis, a small port in the south of England. The seashore at Lyme Regis has many fossils in its rocks. Mary's father, Richard Anning, was a carpenter, but he also collected fossils and sold them to visitors. He taught Mary and her brother, Joseph, how to find fossils and sell them.

Richard died in 1810, and Mary's family became very poor. They continued hunting for fossils to make some money. Then, when Mary was 12 years old, she and her brother made a great discovery. This was the complete fossil of a strange creature with teeth like a crocodile's and a body like a dolphin's. Many scientists went to see the fossil. An expert at the British Museum named the animal an "ichthyosaur," which means "fish lizard."

Mary began to buy books so that she could learn more about dinosaurs. Later, she made many more important discoveries. However, although she knew more about fossils than most professors, she did not become famous until the end of her life. This was because she was poor and because she was a woman.

1. What did Mary Anning discover?

- (A) Fossils that helped to understand that the Earth had once been full of dinosaurs
- (B) How to collect fossils and sell them to tourists at the seashore
- (C) The complete fossils of a crocodile's teeth and a dolphin's body
- (D) A very rare fish like a lizard living in the southern sea of England

2. Which of the following statements about Mary Anning is true?

- (A) She died in 1810 in a small port in the south of England.
- (B) She was an important person in the early study of dinosaurs.
- (C) She named the dinosaur that she found an "ichthyosaur."
- (D) She worked for the British Museum to learn more about dinosaurs and fossils.
